

Extended requirements with respect to the transparency of company business processes as specified in the Sarbanes-Oxley Act extend the fulfillment of the Compliance Act even to the electronic exchange of documents.

E-mail management on the basis of the d.3 system secures the long-term, revision-proof archiving of all emails within a company. Thereby, it is not relevant whether you deploy Microsoft Outlook / Exchange or Lotus Notes. Bi-directional interfaces ensure a smooth integration. Emails can be archived either server-based or directly from the application in an interactive way according to predefined rules. The search for archived emails can be conducted directly from the application as well as through the d.3 system. The process-oriented filing of all emails in virtual record structures allows for a transparent overview of all information as concerns customers, partners, or suppliers directly from your groupware application.

The transformation of all emails and email attachments into long-term stable formats such as TIFF or PDF allows to display the information even after several years – even if the original application does no longer exist.

E-mail – a contemporary communication form that is increasingly used also for the exchange of business relevant information. Consequently, an e-mail becomes a document that, according to legal requirements such as the “principles of data access and for verification of digital records”, needs to be stored long-term .

With the d.velop email management system, you do not only secure the legally correct administration of your electronic correspondence and transparent processes – virtually along the way you reduce your memory requirements of your email system and thus, secure a good system performance.
